Dear Creina, Rochelle & Kelly,

We were kindly provided by the Department an embargoed copy of the ACMA's report A report to government on the adequacy of digital platforms' disinformation and news quality measures, which we have since had a chance to read closely.

We wanted to thank the ACMA for the rigour and thoughtfulness of the analysis of the code in the report, which will be a critical tool in our efforts to strengthen it and maximise its effectiveness in addressing mis- and disinformation online in Australia.

We also wanted to let you know that DIGI supports the ACMA's five key recommendations in principle and we look forward to further work together on the details. We will also closely be considering the report's findings and, in line with your recommendation, will be timing the annual review of the code to take these into account. The review will proactively invite views from the public, civil society and Government on the code and how it can be improved.

DIGI also intends for the review to take into account the evolution of the European Union Disinformation Code which is expected by the end of March, as well as the next set of signatories' transparency annual reports which are due for publication in late May. The review will be launched shortly after, enabling it to also take into account experiences related to the federal election.

Jenny is planning to be in Sydney on April 12 – might you have some time to meet with us in person then or some time virtually over the coming weeks?

Best regards,
Sunita
