Good evening!

Now you can stimulate your night-times with our unfiltered blend of the latest trending stories and favourite picks from The Spectator Australia.

What's spicy this evening

Welcome back, everyone! I hope you were fortunate enough to have the same endless blue skies and perfect weather that we did – although given it was so lovely and warm, I'm sure there are a few climate kids glued to the CBD in protest of the apocalypse. Be careful not to trip over them on your way to work.

I would like to take this opportunity to let you all know that you can now listen to the Australiana podcast or watch Spectator TV straight from the Spectator website. All you have to do is scroll down the page and you'll find the latest episodes. We were fortunate to interview the newly elected Eric Abetz just before the Easter break along with a range of Speccie favourites.

While we were enjoying Easter, it seems our councils, shopping centres, and government services were not. One irate anonymous parent on the North Shore wrote in disgust at the lack of Easter decorations after they endured months of trans and LGBT paraphernalia. When we were promised 'multiculturalism', what politicians actually meant was that they would be replacing Australia's existing culture with everything except traditional Christian festivals. Shame on them all.

The Free Speech Union is hosting TV writer and comedian Graham Linehan, who had one hell of a time making it into Australia after bizarre delays on his visa. As an outspoken critic of the trans movement, he is still trying to fight off those who would see him cancelled over a joke.

Any mention of a 'stadium' is enough to stab fear into the heart of a state Premier – and yet talking about stadiums is exactly what Queensland Premier Steven Miles has to do with the Olympic Games looming over his state.

Economist Joe Branigan highlights the dilemma, with the Labor Party stuck between the cost of living crisis and the value of a long-term investment. To build or refurbish? Both could end the Labor leadership.

And Edie Wyatt dives into the gender critical movement and their fight against the rise of self-ID. With almost every state in the nation allowing men who 'feel' like women to declare themselves as such, the social boundaries that have kept women safe are breaking down. Given how many progressives pretend to fight for the rights of women and LGBT people, the silence from these movements is astonishing.

In case you missed it, the South Australian Voice has been a spectacular disaster, with Indigenous people failing to vote indicating that this is a project of the inner-city elite and activists, not of Indigenous people. The Liberals, who should have shown more of a spine before, have finally vowed to shelve this idea if they are elected.
