

I will keep this brief.

Many visitors to Australia will not be able to call 000

They won't know that before they visit or try to call

They won't understand why they aren't able to call in a panicked situation

It will lead to confusion and unnecessary death, not only in tourists, but in older Australians and in rural Australia

It's clear who benefits from this move, telcos, do not imagine for a second that the public won't see that. Please consider the consequences more carefully.
